Native Receives Award

Blacksburg - A Virginia Tech alumnus from Appomattox is the recipient of the first annual H. J. E. Reid Award given by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Langley Research Center in Hampton, Va.

Clarence C. Poe, Jr., a Tech graduate in engineering science and mechanics, won a $1,000 honorarium and a certificate for the most outstanding technical paper entered in the Reid Award competition for 1972.

An engineer in Langley Research Center's materials division, Poe based his award-winning report on his thesis for the master of science in engineering mechanics degree from Virginia Tech. C. William Smith, professor of engineering science and mechanics at tech, directed Poe's work.

Poe received the master of science degree in 1969, and previously had graduated from Tech with the bachelor of science degree in engineering mechanics in 1961.

Poe's technical paper was titled "Stress-Intensity Factor for Cracked Sheet with Riveted and Uniformly Spaced Stringers". The report departed from much simpler examples of crack behavior in flat metal sheets to consider a variety of practical problems of direct application to aircraft design.

The Reid Award was established in 1972 to honor the memory of the late Dr. Henry J. E. Reid, director of Langley Research Center from 1926 to 1960.

Little Men

An intellectual writing in the national press about the unwieldy congressional system recently constantly referred to members of the Senate (there are 100) and members of the House (there are 435) as "little men."

That has become the fashion in recent years among congressional critics, militants, bleeding reformers, etc.

There are inevitably some "little men" among the 535 members of Congress; however, there are also many fine, high-principled public servants included in its membership. And while one can wish there were more statesmen and less politicians, more high-minded and selfless members, to condemn all members in such blanket name-calling is childish; those who believe such exaggerations are misled and sometimes act disruptively from ignorance and frustration as a result.

Healthy Travel And Tourism Economy Noted In Appomattox County In 1972

The County of Appomattox had a healthy travel and tourism economy during 1972, according to a study released April 1st by the Virginia State Travel Service.

Expenditures by all travelers and tourists in the county amounted to $1,383, or 9.4 per cent of the county's retail business. Local sales tax generated by these travelers is included in this figure.

Total sales for travel businesses amounted to $3,157, or 21.5 per cent of retail business.

According to the Virginia travel study, prepared by Dr. Lewis C. Copeland of the University of Tennessee, there are 51 active firms in the County of Appomattox dealing in the travel and tourism business with 166 owners and employees. These travel businesses include lodging, eating, recreational services, gasoline and auto services.

Ealier this year, Dr. Copeland estimated that travelers spent $997,000,000 in Virginia during 1972 - up $82,000,000 or 9 per cent from the previous year.

What About These Pork Prices?

As she picked up a package of pork chops from the supermarket meat counter, the shopper asked: "What about these pork prices? Who decided this is what I should pay? Why do the prices keep changing? And why is it some pork cuts cost so much more than others?"

The answer to these questions is the shopper herself is the key to which she'll probably reply: "Hog wash! I don't put the prices on those packages."

Yet, it's the combined buying decisions of the nation's homemakers, the pressure of their demand, which determines what prices go on the packages

And it isn't a right now situation. Where pork is concerned, the price the homemaker pays today is the result of situations that existed a year ago and even further back than that. In 1970 responding to consumer demand for meat, the nation's pork producers increased their production of pigs. This ultimately meant more pork in the meat cases of food stores. With more than adequate supplies of pork and other meats available, retail prices dropped. This was reflected back through the marketing chain to the hog farmer whose cost of living, as well as cost of production, had been going up like everyone elses. Hog prices in 1971 dropped to such a low level that it was only through extreme production efficiencies and extended bank loans that farmers were able to survive economically. Some actually had to go out of business.

Faced with an unprofitable situation, most pork producers regarded a further increase in pig production a losing proposition. Thus, the 1972, the 1972 pig crop was smaller. Meanwhile, the previous year's corn blight and bad weather had slowed the increase in beef production as well. Result: Consumer demand for meat was increasing more rapidly than the increase in meat supplies.

While we have had nothing approaching a meat shortage, the pressure of demand on the supply available has forced prices up. Live hog prices are now at a level where the producer can afford to increase the pork output of his herds. That means more pork will be coming to market which, later this year, should bring a leveling off of retail pork prices.

This is a restatement of how the law of supply and demand operates in the livestock industry and specifically the hog industry. The operation of this system depends on the proper signals being transmitted back through the market network in the form of prices. If an artificial or false signal is sent through this system in the form of a governmental imposed price limit or a temporary boycott of meat products, the hog producers will think he has overproduced on hogs and will not increase production rapidly enough to make the down turn of retail prices at the expected time. Thus, price controls and boycotts will not produce their desired effect but will certainly delay the desired down turn in prices. Consumers, producers or no one else in the system can repeal the law of supply and demand; they can only act with it. The livestock producer has not asked for subsidies or supports during years of rising costs of production and rising costs of all consumer and durable goods, so why should he have a subsidy imposed when it finally comes his turn to recover his losses and maybe show a profit. If the consumer wants an uninterrupted flow of high quality, wholesome, safe meat products which is part of the highest standard of living in the world, she must be willing for those in the production segment to make a profit at least half the time. If this is unacceptable there is no such thing as a free lunch.
